LACKAYE TALKS OF "TRILBY" REVIVAL

Says Stengeli Is an Easy Part—
Burr McIntosh Returns to the Stage as Taffy—Miss Harned in Title Role.

REPUBLICAN SPECIAL.
New York, May 20.—There is no play on the American stage that has more to do with the history of the stage than "Trilby".

It made Mr. Paul Potter as a dramatist, and it made the late A. M. Palmer as a producer. Mr. George D. Maurier, who wrote the book, had made a phenomenal success with it. But when America woke up to the possibilities of it all, with the play given to the New Amsterdam Theatre the other night, by Mr. D. M. Maurier, died soon afterward. He did not reap the glorious triumph that his story made through a play that on its revival at the New Amsterdam last week again scored a triumph.

Looking back over ten years, and a decade always makes a great change in any one's life. It is remarkable that nearly the same cast is to appear in "Trilby" today that played in it ten years ago. I spent an evening on the stage of the New Amsterdam Theatre the other night, and I enjoyed it. There was Burr McIntosh with his long side whiskers, as Taffy, talking to little Evelyn, the baby of the company, the top of whose criminal skull only came up to the end of Taffy's most silky whiskers.

"The stage fright," said Mr. McIntosh, "nothing can frighten me, unless it is a gun." "But you have not acted for a long time." "I am not. I have known how to ride a horse or swim, but I can't always ride a horse or swim. The same with acting. I can't always act. You can tell the stage manager what he should know."

Miss Harned, who as Taffy, a gorgeous white costume, with a woman with gray hair and a shirt was draped in the evening costume, and said, "Then, hold for her with a rich contralto voice."

Miss Harned, who by the way, is Mrs. Edward Southern in private life, looked around the raged edge of the wing and said:

"I'm in very good voice tonight, and I hope then Miss Harned walked on the stage and deliberately said in the presence of a very large audience:

"I can sing."

IN HIS DRESSING ROOM
Up in his dressing room on the fourth floor, which is about as big as the average Harlem flat, Mr. Lackaye confided some secrets.

"This part of Stengeli," said Mr. Lackaye, "is not a hard part at all. In fact it is about the easiest part that I ever played. It is easy in this way. That whenever you play yourself, you must play very hard. In this part you play the character. You don't play the make-up. I forget all about these funny whiskers and this false nose. Really, I don't know that I have them on when I am acting, although the nose does interfere with my breathing."

"Have you changed the impersonation at all in the years?" "Not a bit. Possibly I am a little more subdued. I don't rant as much. At least I try not to. I wear the same wig that I wore during the original production, and that coat I have is the very same. Heavy, isn't it? I could get another coat like this if I raked the Broadway from one end to the other. These funny frock coats are so heavy."

"For three months I have starved myself and hunted to get thin and be right to play the part. This two weeks' revival has cost me money, time and discomfort. But I got so I could wear the same old coat. You know the stage has its vicissitudes as well as war."

VIOLATED ELECTION LAWS.

Three Men Are Sent to Penitentiary From Kansas City.

REPUBLICAN SPECIAL.
Kansas City, Mo., May 20.—Three men who violated election laws went to the Penitentiary today from this county to serve terms of one year each.

It is the first time in the history of Kansas County that an election criminal has gone to the Penitentiary from the Criminal Court.

The men are Tony F. Cane, who registered falsely as W. H. Berry, who attempted to vote illegally, and James Winn, alias Williams, who voted, having previously been convicted of petty larceny.

Among others who went to the Penitentiary today was Allan Vernell, a porter for the St. Louis and North Western Railroad, who was convicted of voting illegally.

"The stage fright," said Mr. McIntosh, "nothing can frighten me, unless it is a gun."

"But you have not acted for a long time." "I am not. I have known how to ride a horse or swim, but I can't always ride a horse or swim. The same with acting. I can't always act. You can tell the stage manager what he should know."

GENERAL WOOD'S TASK OF AMERICANIZING THE MOROS —BY IVAN H. WISE

United States Volunteer Who Spent Four Years in the Philippines
Graphically Sets Forth the Pacification of the Savage Natives as General Wood Is Accomplishing That Seemingly Impossible Task—Rival Tribes Are Dissimilar in Language, Religion and Customs.

BRIGADIER GENERAL LEONARD WOOD.

News despatches of the week telling of renewed hostilities between the Moros of Jolo, Philippine Islands, and the United States troops under General Leonard Wood, in which 300 Moros were slain and seven killed and sixteen wounded of General Wood's force, recalls the long and bitter campaign for the subjugation of these piratical islands of the Eastern sea.

General Wood has handled the difficult problem of the subjugation of these warlike and bloodthirsty tribes, whom the Spaniards were never able to subdue with admirable vigor and capacity, but it appears that his task is not yet completed.

No sooner does the word go forth to the civilized world that the "pacification of the Moros is now complete" than the bulletin of a fresh uprising follows closely upon its heels. General Wood has undoubtedly done all that a brave and efficient General and Governor could do, but the work of Americanizing a people such as the Moros of Sulu, Jolo and Mindanao is one requiring not only efficiency and bravery but the slow passage of years as well.

Ivan H. Wise, who spent four years in the Philippine Islands, having enlisted in the volunteer troops from Princeton, Ky., is better qualified, perhaps, than any man in the United States to advise on the work among the Moros. Mr. Wise having spent several years working directly under General Wood. Mr. Wise has written the following description of the pacification of Moro land.

With the headquarters of the Department, U. S. A., at St. Louis.
The Moro Province, geographically, consists of the island of Mindanao and the adjacent groups of the Sulu, Tawi-Tawi and Basilan. Mindanao, appearing upon the map in the form of a spider, has an area approximately that of Ohio. It is inhabited by many diverse tribes, distinguished in language, religion and customs, and possessing no one common bond of union.

The towns, trading centers and contiguous territory are held by Christian tribes, largely of the Visayan race. The vast area of country interior to the coast, the former plains around the inland lakes and the headwaters of streams and intermittent stretches of forest are the undisputed domain of non-Christian tribes, such as the Indonesians and the Malayon Mohammedans.

The former a hardy, warlike people, inhabit the southeastern and eastern portions of Mindanao. They are nomads, practicing a ferocious and nature worship and maintaining an isolated existence. The latter are a more advanced people, and are the Moros of Western and Northern Mindanao.

Center of Moro power is in the island of Sulu and in the Lake Lanao region of Mindanao. The respective Sultans of Sulu and Lanao, the two most powerful and independent of the Moro tribes, have been crowned by hereditary right and blood descent. Sulu is a small island, but it is a powerful one. It is a powerful one. It is a powerful one.

General Wood's task is not yet completed. No sooner does the word go forth to the civilized world that the "pacification of the Moros is now complete" than the bulletin of a fresh uprising follows closely upon its heels.

MRS. FISH'S SUIT ADJUDGED.

Farrier Demands Money for Furs Worn to Social Events.
REPUBLICAN SPECIAL.
New York, May 20.—Chief Justice O'Prey of the City Court has adjudged, in settling the suit of Albert J. Farrier, the further to recover $1,000 from Mrs. Fish.

The plaintiff alleges that Mrs. Fish, early in January, selected eight pieces of furly sable to be made into a muff and tipped. They were delivered to her. Mrs. Fish returned the furs as not being satisfactory, and a lawyer is now at her elbow, claiming that the furs were not made to order.

The further says that the articles were worn to several social affairs and that the defendant must pay for them.
